“We can make a difference together”

In 2009 we reacted to a crisis. 2010 is our chance to move on, making new ideas for social change real. We have an unprecedented chance to rebuild our economy in a way that puts people and communities at its heart.

These ideas and ‘chain reactions’ will start with you, on 12 November

What is the Chain Reaction event?

The Chain Reaction event is a unique chance to bring along your new ideas, hear those of others, and then begin to make them real. There will be provoking speeches from activists and business leaders and insights from senior Cabinet Ministers. But it’s not really about the speeches, it’s about the workshops, the group discussions, the quick chat over coffee.

You’ll leave with new ideas for change, new people to help you, and a set of concrete commitments to doing something differently.

Chain Reactions bring big changes, and the biggest involve everyone – government, business, charity, and people - which is why we’ve invited them all to Chain Reaction 2009!

What will happen?

As well as a programme that will feature a mix of world class speakers and practical workshops, there will be facilitated ‘open space’ conversations, inspirational films and participatory sessions, all designed so that throughout the day participants can share their learning, network with new people, and develop their ideas

Who should attend?

People working in every sector. Young people, older people. People with ideas. People working on innovative projects who want more support. People with open minds. People who can make change happen. Innovators, activists and entrepreneurs. Communicators, innovators and philanthropists. People who will spread the word. People like you?
